vinetur

Vintage Champagne Sales to U.S. Surge as SoDivin Offers Bottles Dating Back to 1953 for Next-Day Delivery

American collectors drive a 20% rise in prestige cuvée demand, with rare magnums and historic vintages now just a click away

Tuesday, March 10, 2026

A growing number of American collectors and wine enthusiasts are turning their attention to vintage Champagne, with a wide selection now available for immediate purchase and delivery. SoDivin, a French retailer specializing in rare and old wines since 2001, reports that its entire stock of vintage Champagne is currently available for express shipping to the United States and other destinations. The company offers bottles dating from 1953 to 2019, with detailed descriptions and high-definition photographs available online or upon request.

The range includes some of the most sought-after names in Champagne, such as Dom Pérignon, Krug, Louis Roederer Cristal, Taittinger Comtes de Champagne, and Bollinger R.D., as well as smaller producers like Pascal Agrapart and André Robert. Prices vary widely depending on the producer and vintage. For example, a bottle of 1953 Moët et Chandon Brut Imperial is listed at €765 (excluding VAT), while more recent releases like the 2019 Philipponnat Blanc de Noirs are priced at €65. Some rare magnums, such as the 1999 Bollinger R.D., reach €581.67 per bottle.

SoDivin’s inventory is updated regularly and includes both single bottles and larger quantities for certain vintages. The company emphasizes its specialized packaging designed to protect bottles during international transport. Orders placed before 2 p.m. Central European Time are shipped the same day using express delivery services. According to SoDivin, this ensures next-day delivery to many destinations, including major U.S. cities.

The retailer also provides high-resolution images of each bottle, allowing buyers to inspect labels, fill levels, and overall condition before purchasing. This transparency is especially important for collectors seeking investment-grade bottles or those looking for gifts or special occasions.

Interest in vintage Champagne has grown steadily in the U.S., driven by both connoisseurs and investors. According to industry data, sales of prestige cuvées and older vintages have increased by more than 20% over the past five years. Collectors cite the unique character of aged Champagne—often described as more complex and nuanced than non-vintage releases—as a key factor in their appeal.

SoDivin’s selection covers a broad spectrum of styles, from blanc de blancs (made exclusively from Chardonnay) to rosé Champagnes and rare single-vineyard bottlings like Philipponnat Clos des Goisses. Notable offerings include the 1981 Krug (€1,000), 1976 Dom Pérignon (€650), and 1971 Louis Roederer Cristal Brut (€750). More accessible options include the 2012 Piper Heidsieck Brut Vintage (€62.50) and the 2008 Billecart-Salmon Cuvée Nicolas François Billecart (€140).

The company operates from Aigues Vives in southern France but serves an international clientele through its website and customer service channels, including email and WhatsApp. All bottles are stored in temperature-controlled cellars until shipment.

For American buyers interested in acquiring vintage Champagne, SoDivin provides downloadable stock lists in Excel format and offers personalized assistance for selecting bottles or arranging shipments. The company’s approach reflects a broader trend among fine wine retailers to combine digital transparency with traditional expertise.

As demand for rare Champagne continues to rise in the U.S., retailers like SoDivin are positioning themselves as key suppliers for collectors seeking both quality and convenience. With all bottles currently in stock and ready for express delivery, American enthusiasts have unprecedented access to decades of Champagne history at their fingertips.